

SPRING.

The APPEAL believes that people like a change from the dull monotony of political editorials, and alleged explanations of topics, and know no better way to gratify that desire than by reprinting the following from the Salt Lake Tribune:

How beautiful is the phenomenon which the Spring brings forth with its approach. People do not mind it because it is one of the gentle operations of nature which they have been accustomed to see once a year all their lives; but that fact does not take away any of the beauty or grandeur from it. It is a resurrection from the dead; the world that became chilled in the Autumn; the world out of which all the light of flowers faded; the world the trees of which gave up their foliage even as the hair falls from the head of the aged; the world that grew still cold until finally the merciful Winter wrapped around it a white winding sheet and made it look as though it was all dressed for the sepulchre, to that world there comes the breath of life, and to the dull ears of that dead came a voice which mortal ears do not hear, which bids it awake and, responsive to that call it rolls back its white shroud, in the sere soil pulses begin to beat; the streams burst with stronger force out of the hills as though to be an infusion of fresh blood into the arteries of the earth; the grass grows green, the trees begin to bud, out of the very snow itself the flowers peep; the chill gradually passes away and the face of the world which had grown fixed begins to smile again under its verdure and its flowers. It is as beautiful a spectacle as mortals could be treated to; it is not only beautiful, but it carries with it the germ of the most sublime hope that ever thrilled and warmed the human heart. It carries with it a hint that possibly, as to the earth, man himself, after the chill and dreariness and the horror of which we call death, there may be an awakening, that perhaps, what we call death is after all only a suspension of life, that under better and fairer conditions that life may be renewed, and that the procession of life and death to mortals may be exactly like the same procession of the seasons. So with the unfolding of Spring it is not strange that many nations have their Spring festivals, to celebrate the renewal of that hope which points the way to another life; where all the aches and pains and cares and sorrows that compass poor mortality here will not weigh it down with their burdens; where disease and fear are both taken away, and where with clearer eyes men may look on fairer scenes; where with more sensitive ears men may hear softer music, and where with clearer brains men will see things as they really are, and with broader intellects have the perfect enjoyment which comes with perfect intelligence untroubled by care or pain.

During a debate in the Victoria Legislature an unfortunate member, whose education had been sadly neglected, was reading out a document to the House, and vainly endeavoring to decipher an obscure letter; turning to his next friend, he asked, anxiously, "Is that a hen or hen?" "O," replied his friend, "call it a hen, and move that it lay on the table."

Goldenson's Brother

Edward Goldenson, a brother of Alex Goldenson, who was executed for the murder of Mamie Kelly, was arrested Monday afternoon for participating in a recent robbery of an Oakland citizen. John Kearny, a saloon keeper, was arrested Sunday for the same crime, and goods worth $70 were captured. They struck their victim with a slingshot.

The Senate went into Com. of the Whole last evening and reported 14 bills with various recommendations.
